

REIMAGINING FOOD SYSTEMS

FOR A SUSTAINABLE & EQUITABLE FUTURE

Henry Lau, Claire Shepansky, Chloe Tan (Xueqi)

Project overview

Mainstream food system practices are rooted in oppressive systems, such as capitalism, colonialism, and individualism. Planners often have limited training to respond.

Our theory of change

In collaboration with Public Health Association of British Columbia (PHABC), Royal Roads University and food security practitioners in Revelstoke, our team developed:

A Just Food System Evaluation Framework

What the Framework unlocks

Justice dimensions represent key elements of a just food system. Using the framework food system practitioners can evaluate their activities against JEDI indicators to measure movement towards food justice.

Findings can identify gaps and strengthen food systems planning.

Next steps

The emergent and complex nature of food justice means that the Framework will constantly evolve. PHABC and Royal Roads University will continue to pilot and steward it, with the vision of integrating it on a digital platform.
